

Intro to Commercial Journalism

Journalism 98, Spring 2010

Sponsored by: Prof. William J. Drummond

Mondays from 7 till 8 PM, 170 Barrows

Course Email: decal@calibermag.org

Presented by the editors of

Caliber
magazine
calibermag.org

I've been involved with newspapers, in some form or another, for a quarter century. If I don't see a compelling reason to read them, why should anyone else? – Michael S. Malone

Newspapers are dead! Haven't you read the newspapers? – Anonymous

Traditional journalism is a dead man walking. – Brian Solis

Newspapers are "dying" of natural causes. Putting them on life-support just draws out the inevitable. Pull the plug and move on. – Dave Title

Every good journalist is aware that his trade may one day go the way of phrenology – and, what's more, the population will hardly protest the extinction. – David Remnick, The New Yorker

Course Description

The internet seems to be the death of print journalism. People are increasingly trading in their fresh issues of New York Times for the glow of laptop screens. The challenge that modern journalism is now presented with is finding a solution to make print publications a viable commodity in today's market; to compete with the computer screen, to maintain a readership and to find a way to convince people pay for information, even though they can get it for free online. This course will explore various innovative techniques which could possibly be used to reclaim this waning readership and forge an entirely new model for future publications. It will also explore various ways journalists can take advantage of online resources and optimize their submissions for online display. The course will be divided into two fields: the business side and the legal side. The business side will look at concepts such as new marketing techniques, the format and layout of successful articles, and how to create unconventional ideas which will make the consumer reach for their wallet. The legal side of the course will be looking at copyright laws, what constitutes libel and obscenity, technical details of publishing, and various key Supreme Court decisions that have strongly influenced journalism and the freedom of the press. The course also plans to provide field experience to its students by giving them the opportunity to apply the concepts described in the class through the campus publication Caliber Magazine. Students will be expected to write articles as a part of their participation in the course.

Nick Anastasiades
Business and Journalism
nickanastasiades@berkeley.edu

Zarko Perovic
Law, Copy and Journalism
coolerthannick@berkeley.edu

(510) 689 3551

Office Hours: To be announced

(858) 822 8285

Office Hours: To be announced

Course Objectives

- Exploring ways to produce a viable print publication in today's market.
- Improving individuals' ability to write effective stories.
- Incorporating high journalistic values into current business and law standards.
- Giving members of the class real world experience by having them participate in the on-campus publication, Caliber Magazine.

Course Layout

Each week the two facilitators in this course will alternate in giving lectures. One week will be devoted to the business side of journalism and the other week will be devoted to discussing the legal aspects of journalism. The class will be structured as a lecture, but is definitely open to digressions and discussions. Aside from the material that will be lectured, there will be several group activities and interactive media displayed in class, i.e. videos, pictures, online articles and such. There will be two workshops, aside from lecture, that aim to help students with the article assignments. They will deal with grammar and stylistic guidelines of a modern journalistic piece. Participation by the students is necessary and highly encouraged.

Readings

There are no assigned readings for this course. Any readings to be covered will be in-class handouts brought by the instructors.

Recommended readings (available on Amazon):

- The Best American Magazine Writing 2009 -- The American Society of Magazine Editors
- Feature and Magazine Writing: Action, Angle and Anecdotes -- D. Sumner and H. Miller

Assignments

The assignments in this class will consist of writing two full and professional articles to be published in Caliber Magazine, one for each issue.

They will be turned in two-weeks after they have been assigned.

Grading

Although this class is a P/NP class, we will be grading students on a letter basis then converting the score to a P/NP, with 70 being the threshold.

The overall score will be constituted of the following:

- Attendance: 25%
- Participation: 5%
- Article 1, Issue: 40%
- Article 2, Blog: 30%

Attendance

Attendance will be taken in the beginning of class. Every student has two allowed absences. If a student misses the class for the third time, they will automatically fail the course.

Plagiarism (text based on the syllabus by Martha Olney, Professor of Economics)

The University defines academic dishonesty as “cheating of any kind, including misrepresenting one’s own work, taking credit for the work of others without crediting them and without appropriate authorization, and the fabrication of information.” Plagiarizing will result in an NP grade and will be reported to Student Judicial Affairs, which may administer additional punishment.

Tentative Class Schedule

Lecture 1, Feb 1: Nick -- Sex, controversy and humor
Marketing techniques & changing consumer preferences.
Application: What do Berkeley students want to read?

Lecture 2, Feb 8: Zarko
How to get a lot of attention without getting in trouble... or worse sued.
Case study: Hustler v. Falwell (2002)

Lecture 3, Feb 22: Nick -- 1,000,000 sex tips
Standing Out: Hot topics and features: Crazy and unconventional ideas.
Article format: Lists or paragraphs? + The importance of a number.
Application: 20 articles that will blow you away.

Workshop, Mar 1: Nick

Workshop, Mar 8: Zarko

Lecture 4, Mar 15: Zarko
How to get a lot of attention without getting in trouble... or worse sued.
Case study: Bethel v. Fraser (1986)
Due: Final issue article. Send it Sunday March 15th by midnight to decal@calibermag.org

Lecture 5, Mar 29: Nick -- More than just the article
Article supplements: Video, interviews, quotes, statistics and more + online journalism
The title and the cover: How it should sound like and how your article can make it there.
Case study: The Daily Californian website, dailycal.org.
Application: Slideshow of bestselling covers.

Workshop, Apr 5: Nick & Zarko

Lecture 6, Apr 12: Nick -- Excuse me, sir
Content: How to gather info, interview and poll. Secrets to being credible.
Application: The art of interviewing, group work.
Due: Final blog article. Send it Sunday April 11th by midnight to decal@calibermag.org

Lecture 7, Apr 19: Zarko
Knowing your free-speech rights as a writer.
Technical Details: model release forms, controversial photos, anonymous interviews...and more!
Case study: Tinker v. Des Moines Independent School District

Lecture 8, Apr 16: Nick & Zarko
Goodbye party, evaluations, and sharing of best articles and ideas.
